Why are you interested in serving as a City Council Member? ***

I have served on various non-profit boards for several years, and found it gratifying to impact my community in ways big and small. However, there are limits to what I can demonstrably achieve as a volunteer and advocate. My goal is to be an agent of change, and, while volunteering is powerful and necessary, I need a proper leadership role to have a bigger impact. Advocating is not the same as being a policy maker. I love our community, and I want to be part of an intentional and committed group of people who share my passion for making our city a great place to live. By serving on the City Council, I can help shape policies, and make decisions that promote the best interests of our citizens. A seat on the Council empowers me to do that. As trite as it sounds, “think globally, act locally” is a powerful truism. I live in Longmont and want to be part of the conversation about it. This position is my way of showing up for Longmont, and serving my community. Longmont is a fantastic city, and I want to make the good parts great, and give the sticky parts the attention they need so the whole city thrives together. I also have the right temperament, experience and passion needed for public service.

Briefly explain what you believe are the two most important issues facing City Council and how do you believe those issues should be addressed? ***

Based on the most recent survey by the City, growth and homelessness are the top concerns of residents. Since I think elected officials should represent their constituents, I think my priorities should reflect my community's. Therefore, economic growth and the unhoused population needs are my critical issues. Growth is good and inevitable. Longmont is growing for good reasons. However, the city needs to adhere to a common vision that meets the needs of the community through a critical lens that balances economic development, environmental sustainability and social equity. We can use tools such as master plans for land use, zoning regulations, and growth boundaries. We can support transit infrastructure that is inclusive (cars, bikes, buses, trains) and connects various communities to keep people, goods and services moving with minimum congestion. Are bike/walk paths clear of debris and passable? Can we add more bus routes? We should avoid approving new construction in areas already impacted by traffic congestion. Can we work with the local school district to make start/stop times staggered so that we don't add to rush hour? People loathe heavy traffic, and finding ways to ease traffic congestion can diffuse a lot of fears about development. We also need to monitor housing developments. I prefer approving housing that creates neighborhoods, not just massive apartment buildings with the ability to control the price of housing for huge swaths of land. Whenever there is a question about the viability of new growth, go back to the mission and value statement. Does it make our community better for everyone or just a few?

Homelessness has become a massive issue for everyone in Boulder county. There are affordability factors at play, but mental health and substance abuse programs are better tools for addressing homelessness. We need robust programs that are well-funded and have community support that meet the unhoused person where they are, and can provide immediate and direct relief to get them into treatment centers. As for the larger community, they will be more supportive of expensive social programs when they feel safe on their streets, and the streets are kept clean of litter and encampments. Our community does want to see the unhoused populations getting help and support, but they also (and should) have their needs as a tax-paying citizen to be addressed and protected. Several cities, such as Salt Lake City, and Austin, have utilized the "Housing First" model with varying degrees of success. Admittedly, their tax base is significantly larger, but shows promises of success even when scaled down. They also utilize coordinated entry systems to directly channel people into helpful programs. We can look to other cities and their responses for solutions and ideas as well.
